Covid: a catalyst to improve patient engagement. Rethink wound care

At Mölnlycke®, we value connecting with healthcare professionals from around the world. Join us for a round table discussion led by Gary Hopkins, featuring David Armstrong, Keith Harding, Gulnaz Tariq, Jemell Geraghty, and Emma Wright.

We are living in difficult times, with patients suffering from chronic wounds being at increased risk for severe complications, e.g. amputation rates in DFUs are significantly rising globally. The COVID-19 pandemic has resulted in many changes to the care of both acute and chronic wounds, especially where that care is being carried out, and by whom. Patients and families may not be willing to visit hospitals and clinics, or have the nurse come into their homes, so instead they are faced with the prospect of 'shared care' with their clinician, which has led them needing to learn how to change their own dressing and importantly identify when their wound is not getting better.

Meet your fellow professionals and the Mölnlycke team – join our live Q&A afterwards.
